Miss Alice will be missed by all who knew her acclaimed folk artist Alice Latimer Moseley died Friday at her home/studio on Bookter Street in Bay St. Louis. She was 94.

Miss Alice was a friend of mine. She was a friend to everyone. And, make no mistake about it, Alice loved Bay Saint Louis, her adopted home.

I first met Miss Alice years ago when she called to report a missing newspaper delivery. She informed me of her age and suggested I might ought to get that newspaper to her right away. I

And staved to visit. I couldn't leave. A five minute trip turned into several hours. I was fascinated, listening to her stories and one-liners, amazed at her sharp wit. To say she was a real character is a big understatement.

From that point on, all guests at the Ponder household and business clients to the Sea Coast Echo have been required to visit the studio where. "The House is Blue, but the Old Lady Ain't."

Miss Alice moved to the Bay after attending an art show here at the invitation of Jerry Dixon. "I knew this was the place I had been looking for." Alice told me in an interview once. " This town has been wonderful to me, I could never repay the people here for all they have done for me. Coming here was the best move I have ever made."

Born in Birmingham, Alabama in 1909, Miss Alice was a school teacher. She taught eight grade English for 30 years in the Memphis, Tennessee area. "Young people are no worse today than they ever were," she told me once. "They have more temptations, but young people are just fine. It's the parents and lack of school discipline that's the problem. They're afraid of being sued." She first started painting at age 60. Her mother suffered from Alzheimer's disease. "It's such a terrible disease, there's nothing you can do," she had explained. "I don't think my mother even knew who I was I was a little resentful and that's when I started my painting. It was therapy for me." Had it not been for her mother's illness she would have continued teaching. "My painting is a gift from my mother."

from my mother."

Bay St. Louis and Waveland honored Miss Alice in 1996, proclaiming, "Alice Moseley Day"

ationally in the two cities and hosting a gala reception. There is a children's room at Hancock Medical Center dedicated to her. She had also been featured many times in regional magazines, this and other publications. Last year, she was honored by the University of Mississippi at a reception in Oxford where many of her friends and former students from the Memphis area were able to attend.

Anyone who knew Miss Alice also knew Herman the beagle, her photogenic companion. She rescued him from the animal shelter. Pull out a camera to take a picture of Miss Alice, and Herman would run to her side and pose. Herman will continue to greet visitors when they enter the studio.

My family returned during the home Thanksgiving holidays last year after an out-oftown visit with relatives to find several phone messages from Miss Alice. "Please call me". Then, "you better hurry up and call me." And finally something to the effect that we were ignoring her.

Turns out that she had baked one of her famous black walnut cakes! My wife Sherry hurried over to the studio and brought some home. Next time I saw Miss Alice, she wanted to know if I liked the cake. It was great I replied. "Well," she stated, "If you had been home and if you had come over when I first called, like you should have, it would have been even better!"

She once said that when she got to the point where she could no longer paint, she wanted to write down or record her stories. "That's just what I need, a third career!," she laughed.

entitled. A video "Hello, I'm Alice Moseley," just recently released. It captures a number of her stories for future generations. She was very proud of the project, not because of her art, but because she believed teaching to be her true success in life. I will miss Alice.

A community celebra-tion of Alice's life will take place this Saturday in the Bay St. Louis Depot at 6:30 p.m. Everyone is invited, I will be there.

Her son, Tim, plans to keep the studio open and make it into a museum.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Alice Latimer Moseley Folk, Museum, 214 Bookter Street, Bay Saint Louis, MS 39520.

In 17th century New England, a step on the way to proving to one's friends, neighbors and relatives that he was predestined to be with God after death was for a man to acquire the title "Gentleman". Dowdy as he took over the party chairmanship from Rickey Cole.

"We are the party which looks out for the needs of people, the little people, and Mississippians should be reminded of our core values," the 60-year-old Dowdy declared.

Four elderly couples recently visited him in his McComb law office distraught over losing their Medicare drugs, he said. "All of them voted for Barbour, and now they wish they had their vote back," Dowdy added.

In sharp contrast to the racial split that plagued state Democratic Executive Committee decisions in years past, the transfer of last week-end by a unanimous vote of the biracial committee.

Significantly, this year marks the 40th anniversary of the historic challenge brought by the Mississippi Freedom Democratic delegation to unseat the allwhite regular Mississippi Democratic delegation at the National Democratic convention in Atlantic City.

Included in the Mississippi Freedom delegation were some of the most noted civil rights activists of that time, notably Robert Moses and the late Fannie Lou Hamer. Her testimony before the credentials committee so stirred the convention that the challengers were awarded two at-large seats and the Regulars were required to sign a mild loyalty pledge.

The state's regulars, thereupon were ordered by Gov. Paul Johnson to come home (five, however, did remain). Meantime the Freedom group rejected the

the convention:

What resulted from the challenge was an historic Southern shift in Democratic politics. When it became indelibly clear that neither Mississippi nor other Dixie states could continue excluding blacks from participating in state party decisions, many white Democrats began defecting to the Republican Party.

Dowdy sees Democratic contingent in the Mississippi House as the key building block in erecting a new and stronger state Democratic Party. Before House Speaker

Students in The University of Southern Mississippi's Department of Marine Science will have the opportunity this fall for firsthand experience with one of the world's most technologically advanced survey systems.

Optech International, a subsidiary of Toronto-based Optech Inc., will sponsor a graduate-level course on airborne laser technology this fall within Southern Miss, Department of Marine Science. Optech Inc. is the world's leading manufactur-er of airborne laser mapping technology.

"Over the past several years, The University of Southern Mississippi's dedication to teaching and research in hydrographic science has resulted in the creation of a world-class academic program," said Dr. Grady Tuell, managing o Optech director International.

adjunct professor for the Southern Miss Department of Marine Science. "I will teach a graduate course on the topic of airborne laser technology and its application to surveying problems in shallow water and coastal mapping environments," Tuell said. "I will rely upon my Optech colleagues, both here and in Canada, to assure that we create a challenging and interesting course. I will bring in guest lecturers who are truly world-class authorities in all aspects of laser mapping technology."

Optech International has also donated $250,000 worth of hydrographic laserspecific software for student education and research associated with the course.

"Currently, no university... graduate-level teaches courses in bathymetric airborne laser mapping," Tuell

Dr. Grady Tuell is welcomed to the Department of Marine Science as an adjunct faculty member by several members of the department's faculty at the John C. Stennis Space Center. From left are Dr. Jerald Caruthers, Dr. Stephan Howden, Dr. Vladimir Kamenkovich, Tuell, Dr. Donald Redalle, Dr. Dmitri Nechaev, Dr. Charlotte Brunner, and Dr. Alan Shiller, Tuell is holding a letter formalizing his adjunct professorship. He will begin teaching airborne laser technology in the fall.

Southern Miss become an academic center of expertise Tuell is now a new in this technology, and in the fusion of airborne laser data with other data sets which ultimately improve our understanding of the shallow water environ-

Tuell's expertise in this relatively new technology will expand curriculum for current Ph.D. candidates in the Department of Marine Science who are seeking a doctorate in marine science with a concentration in hydrographic science.

"We currently have two students seeking that degree right now," said Don Roman, director of Southern Miss, Hydrographic Science Research Center at Stennis. This (doctoral) level course is simply not available anywhere else and adding this to their curriculum will be a tremendous benefit to their degree program." The new course will also benefit students seeking the see master's degree in hydro- Administration. He was also graphic science, as airborne laser mapping is becoming an extremely useful tool in the surveyor's arsenal.

Optech's system combines a powerful, probing laser radar, or "lidar," and high-speed electronics on an airborne platform, usually a small airplane. By surveying water depths from the air, the lidar avoids the time and access problems that hinder survey platforms on the water.

"This is an evolving technology in hydrographic science and one that we're pleased our students will learn more about from Dr. Tuell," Roman said.

Tuell received his doctoral and master's degrees from Ohio State University and a bachelor's degree from the University of Georgia. Before assuming his current position with Optech, Tuell completed 20 years of active duty with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric an associate professor in the Department of Civil and Coastal Engineering for two years at the University of Florida.

Optech established International established offices at Stennis Space Center in 2001, providing the company with proximity to government customers and academic collaborators. Last month, the company relocated to new offices at the Stennis Airport.

Cyber Security in Mississippi

THE SEA COAST ECHO

The images of 9/11 continue to haunt society in America today. The weakness in our systems of government had never been so vividly placed right in front of our eyes. Now more than ever we should be prepared on a local level for the possibility of a different type of attack exploited by those who wish to interfere with the lawful, necessary and even critical functioning of our public services.

To reduce the threat and better understand the weaknesses in our computerized information systems, the Office of the State Auditor and the Mississippi Department of Homeland nas $820,000 for the assessment of cyber security in each of the state's 82 counties. A federally funded mandate, beginning October 1, 2004, with each county being reimbursed up to $ 10,000, will assess the connectivity of the county's computer information systems.

"We are redefining how we proactively protect our state and local government from a edifferent type of attack that we face," states Ed Worthington, Director of Homeland Security for Mississippi. Mississippi "The Department of Homeland Security looks forward to working with the State Auditor and the local government, in developing a Cyber Security Plan of Action.'

Testing will be issued by approved assessment companies. Technology Systems (ITS) is currently accepting Request for Proposals from Vendors to perform the Security Audits. Anyone interested in responding to the request should visit the ITS web-http://www.its.state.ms.us/rf ps/3396.htm. Once the assessment has been completed, a report detailing the issues and possible solutions will be provided to the county, Homeland Security and the Office of the State

As part of the solution process, the amount allocated to each county is intended to offset the entire cost and monies not used to fund assessment can be utilized for implementing solutions to problems identified in the assessment. Whether it be a computer for the Sheriff's office in communicating with State and other local officials by e-mail/live video conference or to strengthen one's fire wall to prevent hacker's break-in, this will help in making the state's 82 counties better prepared and equipped for the 21st Century.

State Auditor Bryant stated, "For several years now, we have worked with our county leaders to integrate technology. This Cyber Security review will enhance our E-Government program to focus on public safety and protection. It will be the first of its kind in the I appreciate Worthington's nation. Director leadership in this vital mis-

Membership is open to anyone, but experience singing in high school, college or church choirs is desirable. The Mississippi Arts Commission is a state agency that serves more than 1.7 million Mississippians through grants supporting programs to enhance communities, assist artists and arts organizations, promote the arts in education and celebrate the state's cultural heritage. Miss Alice -- was still shining, at about 6:30 p.m. She was 94. A memorial service will be held for her on Saturday, July 17, at 6:30 p.m. at the Bay St. Louis Train Depot.

She and her best friend, Herman the smiling dog, entertained both locals and visitors with stories and sprigs of wisdom each day, rain or shine, at her home gallery. She rose each morning to open the gallery usually sporting her favorite red beret.

Friend Sherry Ponder, who spent many of Moseley's last days with her, conducted an "interview" with Miss Alice about a month before her death. "She wanted to sit in the studio," said Ponder. "And though she didn't wear shoes, she did insist on wearing her red hat."

Though Miss Alice was known most recently as a folk artist whose paintings reflected the wry humor and special outlook that she had on life, painting was a second career.

By the time she became an artist, Miss Alice had already devoted 30 years to teaching English and more importantly to her - to the shaping of young minds. That, she once said, was her most important accomplishment. "A lot more rewarding than working with paint and water" she would say.

She had also devoted many more years to being a wife to husband W. J., who preceded her in death in 1980, and a mother to her only son Tim, who she left behind. Tim, now a counselor in Pass Christian, followed his mother to the Coast about ten years ago, just a few years after Miss Alice had moved to the area in 1988, at the age of 79.

Tim will continue his mother's legacy, keeping the gallery operating, and converting what used to be living space into Bay St. Louis' first museum, featuring Miss Alice's originals and later, Tim's antique collection. Herman will continue to smile for visitors, coming to work each day as usual, and returning to spend the night in Pass Christian with Tim.

"I can't think of anything she would like more than to be remembered," said Tim. "For someone to pull into Bay St. Louis and ask for her museum.'

Tim remembers his mother as a woman who liked to do her best at whatever it was she was doing and who was tenacious at reaching her goals.

"I sometimes called her a shameless self-promoter," said Tim. "She would go and greet newcomers and take them a print, but before she left she would ask them to pass out her brochures, and they would. Not everyone had her nerve."

Hancock Tourism Board director Beth Carriere agrees.

"She did her job and I did mine and together we had a special relationship," said Carriere on promoting Miss Alice's art. "I always felt like I was talking to a contemporary. Behind those beautiful blue eyes and under that white hair was a timeless soul."

Friend Dale St. Amant met Miss Alice when she brought over her usual print of greeting to St. Amant's new business right next door to the studio. The two had an instant connection, probably because St. Amant was also a retired English teacher, she said, Like most everyone who came into contact with Miss Alice, St. Amant admired her spirit and determination.

"If someone would say, have a good day, she would say, 'you don't have a good day; you make it a good day'," said St. Amant. "She always said that a person had to have a reason for getting up in the morning,'

Tim also remembers his mother's love of cooking and canning, though funnily enough, Miss Alice herself was not a big eater. She just loved to cook for others.

"She was always fixing something and my dad would eat whatever it was she would make," said Tim. "I would always be on some special diet or another and she would get mad at me because I wouldn't eat what she fixed."

She also loved to garden and was quite proud of her gardens, said Tim.

When it came to her art. Tim said, Miss Alice was not the kind who had to paint everyday; she loved telling more. And she turned that art of telling stories into a successful career. Even her paintings all tell a story and Miss Alice used to say that people were buying the stories, not the art.

"She would start with a runny mixture of paint and let it dribble and run down the canvas," Tim said. "She painted from her own imagination ... and soon there it would be."

Miss Alice started painting, she would say, as a therapy, while she was taking fered with would. when she their beau home place at Phonear Batesville Mia just south of the area. It was during th that she knew she wanted to make a change.

Some time before. she received several invitations. to participate in art shows and pulled one out of the stack at random. The show was in Bay St. Louis, the Beach Front Festival, She called Serenity Gallery owner Jerry Dixon, who organized the show, and told him she was coming.

"I hadn't mailed the invitation and had no idea how she got it," said Dixon. "But I told her she was welcome. She said, I'm a little old lady and need to be under a tree, so we put her under. the only tree there was."

Later, Miss Alice decided she wanted to make the Bay her home and phoned Dixon to tell him.

"But you don't know anyone, I said, and she said, I know you,' and of course she brought people right to her door," said Dixon."

Miss Alice and Dixon became fast friends and she always credited him with bringing her to the Bay and with helping her get a start as an artist here. Along with. Tim, he helped her find the Bookter St. house and, when her dog Lily died, to find Herman at the animal shel-

"She had a unique understanding of people and human nature," said Dixon. "She loved rainbows and felt that Bay St. Louis was her pot of gold at the end of the rainbow."

TEN YEARS AGO

July 10, 1984 - The pur-chase of the old CSX Depot remains mired in multi-governmental red tape; but the mayor vows the city will prevail. City Council members offered to meet in an emergency session whenever necessary to take action, racing to qualify for federal money to restore the old depot. While Councilman Tad Black suggested the entire deal possibly could collapse, Mayor Eddie Favre stood firm. "There is a possibility that we are going to die tomorrow, but we're going to get the depot." The city has a $580,000 grant from Federal Transportation Funds to restore the 1928 structure on Railroad Avenue, and has agreed to pay some $86,000 to purchase it.

County sheriff's coffers are richer by some $226,027 as a result of forfeiture of cash confiscated in an April drug bust in Pearlington. But the funds, seized then, must be deposited in a special fund. The principal cannot be spent without further court order, Circuit Court Judge J. Rubble Griffin ruled Friday in granting District Attorney Carama's request that the money be turned over to Hancock County. And interest from the money may be expended only to purchase capital equipment, including automobiles for the sheriff's department. That interest, Sheriff Ronald Peterson estimated, should amount to about $24,000 a year.

program wars, ment came at workloal thinc ment came at a critical fince in America's dissory, when the nation inseded to prove beyond doubt its technological superiority.

People who lived on the Mississippi coast and in Southeest Louisiana during the Apollo era witnessed firsthand the groundwork laid to achieve these historic milestones. The beginning of NASA Stennis Space Center (SSC) came just five months after President John F. Kennedy's May 1961 challenge to send Americans to the Moon before the end of the decade. SSC's creation provided the nation the testing site for the rocket components that took Americans to the Moon and changed the world; it also forever changed the communities surrounding the center.

People living in the area at the time recall the impact that the completion of the NASA test facility had on their hometowns. One resident says things were never the same. Subdivisions sprang up to house engineers and their families moving in from Alabama, California and other points across the nation.

"The main thing I remember was the huge scale of construction," recalled longtime employee Jeanne Kellar of Picayune, Miss., InDyne Inc. s documentation coordinator for NASA's central engineering files. "It was just everywhere you looked - in town, around the site, the interstate. And the people came from everywhere: New York. Colorado, Florida, Alabama, you name it. To a smalltown girl like me, it really was something to meet all those people."

The center's construction in Hancock County, begun in 1963, was the largest building project in Mississippi and second largest in the U.S. at that time. In 1966, the facility built to test launch vehicles for the Apollo program was completed, opening as the Mississippi Test Facility (MTF). The project's total estimated cost in 1962 was $250 million.

"The Saturn V effort at MTF was remarkable," said retiree Boyce Mix of Slidell, TALLS." "I can remember when we had one phonerline out here," said Pat Money, also of Slidell, who will mark his 39th year at SSC this summer. "The phrase Never was so much done by so few really applies to that time."

Both rocket boosters for the Apollo vehicles - the first-stage S-IC and the second-stage S-II - were too big to travel from their assembly station at Michoud Defense Plant in New Orleans any way other than by barge up the Pearl River. Because the Mississippi and Louisiana highway departments engineers had no idea how big the rockets of the future would be, the Interstate 10 bridge under construction at that time was built 92 feet above the East Pearl River. NASA contributed $4.5 million to the road fund to help build it.

On a highly ambitious schedule, workers dredged 15 miles of the East Pearl River to the Intracoastal Waterway, dug 7.5 miles of canals inside the site and built a Panama Canal-sized lock system to connect the river and the interior canals. Despite a 1968 salt marsh mosquito plague and a long, soggy 1964 spring that threatened to slow work on the Saturn V test site, the test facility was completed in only three years.

"I only had two Saturdays off in 1967," Kellar said. "Everybody was working six days a week, and no one complained. We knew we had a deadline to meet. We were going to make it work, and we were glad to do it. We were just one big team. We were and are very proud to have been a small part of our going to the Moon."

The center conducted the first static test firing of the Apollo/Saturn V secondstage prototype engine in April 1966, and less than a year later began testing the first and second stages of the rocket.

The effects of the first tests for the huge stages of the Saturn V were felt far and wide. Residents recall that the reverberations from testing the cluster of the five huge Saturn engines broke windows as far away as Mobile, Ala.

Dianne Bulen of Abita Springs, La., now administrative officer in SSC's Propulsion Test Directorate, came to work at the center in 1965 for Gordon Artley, right we saw the task of get-rights facility up and run-ing. "When the first test was conducted," she said, "I seight the world was going to explode. The ground shuddered, windows rattled all the way to Slidell. And when we watched those astronauts walk on the Moon, you can't imagine the feeling of pride, to know you. had a part in getting them there."

That testing led to one of humankind's most phenomenal achievements when Apollo 11 Astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin set foot on the Moon.

It also spawned the motto, "If you want to go to the Moon, first you've got to go through Hancock County, Mississippi."

When Apollo 11 lifted off in July 1969, then-Test Site Manager Jackson Balch is quoted as saying, "The dramatic flight is especially significant to all of us because two of the major elements of the Saturn V vehicle... were checked out and proven flightworthy at the MTF."

"I hope we can somehow recapture that excitement. said Mooney, now NASA's project manager for the Space Shuttle Main Engine program at SSC. Everybody ought to have that sense of accomplishment. I don't think space exploration has even cracked the shell of its potential."

Today, SSC's state-of-theart facility remains America's largest rocket test complex. Its 125,000acre buffer zone is considered a national asset. Because the A-, B- and E-Complexes are designed for propulsion testing that ranges from component to engine to stage-level testing, the center is poised to rise to a new challenge.
